Cesar Chavez

Cesar Chavez was an American labor leader. He was born in Yuma, Az in 1927 and died April 23 1993. He grew up in the fields with his parents. He started working at a young age picking fruits to help his parents get more money, so they could have enough for food. It was very hard because they were not treated fairly and sometimes they did not have money for food.

When Cesar grew up, he was not happy about what was happening, so he decided to gather people and start marching, which they called huelga. Their bosses did not like this, and Cesar wanted change so much that he would go on hunger strikes. After all the marches, the bosses decided to raise wages and most people were happy.

Thinking about Lowell?

Lowell is the oldest school west of Mississippi and was founded in 1856. Someone might want to go to Lowell if they want to be challenged. Lowell is a challenging school to go to and not only that, but trying to get accepted is difficult as well. But from my experience at the Lowell back to school night, everyone there was helpful and supportive of us going to Lowell.

Lowell gives you many choices when it comes to picking classes. Lowell is known for teaching students what their next step in life is and giving students all the academic support they need.

Even though there are many good things about Lowell, there are also some things people want them to change. Many people do not like the way they enroll students, because they make students take a test to get in, as well as looking at their academic skills from middle school. This may change in the future.
